this axis, with agricultural activity.

At first, the suggestions of the neighbors were gathered, and subsequently incorporated into the analysis and discussion. Different locations on the plot and uses were evaluated, with the help of drawings, models and a textile extempore spatial exploration of the site.

(highlighting the institution in the distance), and the wooden structure to more be visible on the side facing the building's facade, creating a shared interior that would be complementary to the access area of the civic center. Between these frames we built platforms at different levels consolidating a support structure for seating and shade and a slightly elevated viewpoint to recognize the surrounding fields and their activity.

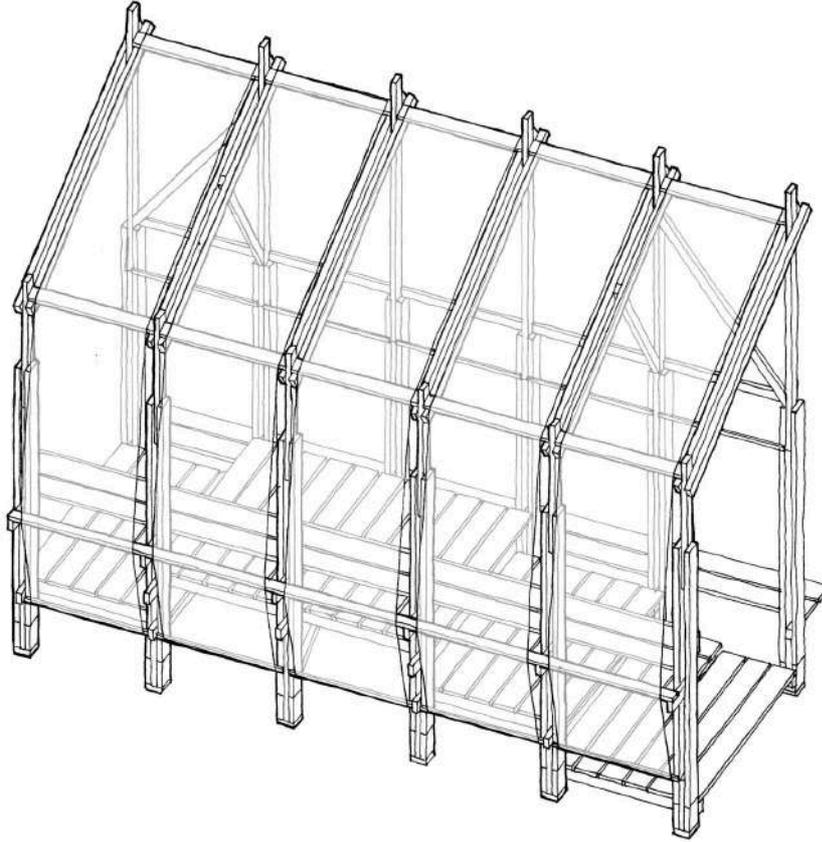

used, contributed to this learning process. The workshop's tight schedule also acted as a defining constraint in decision making.
